1976.
A time for celebration.
Beginnings.
Stirrings of change.
Holding on to each other.
In fear, in love.
Old dreams shattered.
Washed away in darkness.
Goodbyes.
Warm, alive.
In hope we trust.
Now: unformed horizons.
Rain, rainbows.
Anything but neutrality.
Watching present fade into past.
The endless drunken past.
Dedication.
To people, to places.
To present forever becoming past.
That life goes on — on.
Something worth following.
Remembering.
Beginnings: endless beginning.
Celebration, '76.

AMERICAN BICENTENNIAL 1776-1976

It is a pleasure to congratulate the class of 1976 on its commencement.

My personal best wishes for a truly exciting beginning which will hopefully bring you every opportunity for a rewarding and happy life.

The faculty and administration have attempted to provide you with a varied educational and extracurricular program. We hope that your involvement and experiences at Coventry High School will provide you with the skills, academic background and cultural awareness necessary to compete in a rather complex world.

Because I came into Coventry High School with you as a new principal four years ago, I extend special good wishes to each member of the class of '76 in our Bicentennial year.

Sincerely,

James A. Di Prete

Principal

We have shared many good and hard times together and there are many things that we can be proud of. We are the first graduating class of the new Coventry High School. It is so appropriate because we were a new type of student when we entered school four years ago. We brought back the meaning of school spirit, the success of dances and the feeling of victory -- who will ever forget the Thanksgiving game of 1975. Now we must meet new challenges and learn to work as one for peace in each of our lives and throughout the world. I hope that each one of you obtains your individual goals and most importantly happiness.

Keep Smiling,

Roxana Elvir

Senior Class President

The hills and the sea and the earth dance.
The world of man dances in laughter and in tears.

The little ones leaped, and shouted, and laugh'd
And all the hills echoed.

CLASS HISTORY

On a blustery day in early September 1972, Invisible Harry boarded a bus for Coventry High School. Upon arriving, Harry followed what was to be the Class of '76 into the auditorium. After the traditional greetings had been given, homerooms were assigned. Harry, not being used to this strange practice, followed a likely class out the door. As the class marched down the hallway Harry noticed that one person in particular was out of step. After further inquiry he discovered that this was Mark Coletta, a typical high school student. Harry, unbeknownst to Mark, followed him to his home room. Upon careful observation, Harry came to the conclusion that this was most definitely not a typical high school student.

He had no sooner reached this conclusion when a loud ringing sound knocked him to the floor. Still shaking, Harry sought sanctuary under a nearby chair just in time to avoid hundreds of freshmen feet. As soon as the path was clear Harry made a mad dash for the door.

As the days progressed, Harry noticed some of the idiosyncracies of the Class of '76; Mr. Piasci's torture chamber, the rubber stoppers passed off as Gummi-bears, and the ten minute riot they called a snack break. But Harry became accustomed to them, and was able to observe their actions more calmly during the rest of the year.

At high noon in September of '73 Harry once again boarded the bus for Coventry High School. The first thing he did was to look for Mark Coletta. He soon found, however, that his friend was still out of step. Somewhat disappointed, Harry went in search of another person to observe. Intrigued by his strange haircut he followed Mr. Berard to the guidance office. Amazed, Harry watched person after person leave the office more bewildered than ever. After only a few minutes, these brainwashed students had been forced to give up their basket weaving classes for Calculus. Not wanting to take Calculus, Harry left.

Toward the end of the year Harry witnessed the first successful dance of the Class of '76. School Spirit was definitely picking up, and Harry enjoyed himself enormously.

The rest of the year was relatively uneventful, except for the illustrious wrestling team. Harry attended every match. Seeing that each one was success, he decided that next year he would attend the football games.

As the sun rose over the horizon in September of '74, Harry was looking forward to driving to school with Mark Coletta. As Mark pulled to the school, Harry, pale and shaking, got out of the car.

With the arrival of the school rings in December, school spirit was at a peak. But not for Harry. While everyone else at the Christmas dance was showing off their rings, Harry sat in a corner and pouted.

Soon Harry became aware of a great controversy among the students. It seemed that there was no money in the budget for athletics. The school committee encountered so much opposition they were forced to give in. Not only was money for athletics procured, but funds enough for a new school as well.

With the coming of Spring, the uppermost thought in Harry's mind was a date for the junior prom. At first he set his sights high. He chose Fran Pare, the junior class president. It was soon brought to his attention that his beloved was dating a football player. Harry hid in a locker for four days. Although he didn't have a date Harry did have a wonderful time, and even managed to sneak in a dance with the Prom Queen, Casey Colwell.

Class day was Harry's next big event. Even an uninvolved observer such as Harry, could not help but feel the thrill of the Juniors as they turned their rings around and formally became Seniors. Harry began to think that this class was not as bad as he thought it was.

When the first day of the '75-'76 school year was cancelled because of a raccoon, Harry knew that he was in store for a strange year. After much deliberation, he decided that he would again trust his life to Mark to get him to school.

At the end of the day, as Harry was getting ready to leave, he heard the sound of thunder in the distance. The sound grew closer and closer, and soon he could see a mob of midgets charging down the corridor. It was the Junior High on afternoon session. Harry ran for his life, and dearly hoped that the rumor of a new school he had heard was true.

After many delays came the exciting announcements that the new school would finally open. Ecstatic, Harry hurried to the school to be the first one to set foot in this marvelous building. Running full speed down the corridor, he ran smack into Mr. Marshall, the guardian of the gate. When a crushing onslaught of stampeding students swept him into the maze of halls Harry became lost; a predicament common to many.

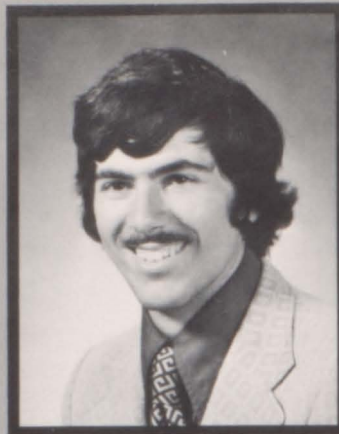

And so it went day after day. He watched the class of '76 elect Roxanna Elvir as its class president, order caps and gowns, and best of all, annihilate West Warwick in the annual Thanksgiving rivalry. In fact, Harry loved this class so much that he stayed on with them until graduation. He left graduation in tears, and watched the cars slowly pull out of the parking lot. The last car to pull out was none other than his old pal, Mark Coletta. Although Mark could not see it, Harry waved and silently walked away.

OCTOBER 28, 1975

All Classes are to Report to Room 218

Come,
Let us speak together
About those days
When love was all around,
About those old ways
We always thought were sound.

Now
We have lived.
Yes, we have lived so much,
But we have lived
Separate
From each other.

Hey,
It has been a long time.
Yes, it truly has been.
To think about how long
Makes it seem even longer
So let's not count the time.

But
Something is very different.
Yes, you have changed.
Your outlook is just not the same.
Separately, we have been through so much,
We just can't mesh together now.

So,
Let us speak together
About those old days
When love was all around,
About those old ways
We always thought were sound.

— Lorri Smith

So easy it was to tell black from white,
It was all that easy to tell wrong from right;
And our choices were few and the thought never hit
That the one road we traveled would ever shatter and split.

--Bob Dylan
